

The first main edit I made was shifting the word diet to all one line. When gaining feedback from many peers it seems that my approach was not as clear as I wanted it to be. Once I explained to people the idea it was understood but, I want to make this change so I didn't have to explain it beforehand. I also added the red border to the letter "t" to also help fix this problem. With this I adjusted the photos behind the letter images to help make the letters stick out more. I turned down the transparency and made sure that most of the small graphics behind the letters were mainly black and white to not take away from the red letters. The last revision I did relates to my reflection. I added more detail about the main challenge I faced with the image letters and finding the balance between eye appealing without being too bare in regards to the background graphics. I also added more pertaining to my reasoning behind choosing this argument topic and how my experience at Western Psychiatric helped to make this as accurate as possible.
